

Doug & Christine

12 months ago the engineering company i was working for went bust due to the recession and so I faced redundancy. I decided to make a go of things and use my skills to set-up a mechanic workshop. Initially I had some work but then it seemed to dry up and left me with the on-gonig costs of rent etc.

I had to decide what to do next- I saw an ad in the paper for spare-time distributors and decided it was something i could fit round my mechanic's work. I was a sceptic and after my first week of small orders nearly gave up but due to the support of the team stuck with it and was surprised how the orders kept mounting. I did over £1,000 of retail in my first 4 weeks and this is the cheque below.

My wife, chris has now seen the bigger picture and we've decided to give it ago and even my son is helping out - so you could call it a family business! Chris is an industrial caterer now but used to be a chef- she changed as she was fed-up of long unsociable hours.

Our aim now is to change our lifestyle so we have enough money to take time-out and enjoy being a family and who knows the odd all-expenses paid holiday would be nice.

So why not you? Did we think a few years back we would be puting out catalogues- 'no' but were glad we are now because we know we can follow the kleeneze sytem and reap the rewards.
